In another case a detechment of the Legion dispersed a band of the maranders, but lost two killed and six wounded in the operation. The following incident shows how freely the dacoits move about. M. d'Eu, a gentleman engaged in studying the agriculture of the district, was at the village of Tu-phap. On the 12th ultimo, about five o'clock in the even ing, he saw a hundred men pass his door in Indian file, some thirty or forty of them armed with breechloaders and the remainder with years of age dressed in an elegant preen rob Seeing them going along thus openly in broad daylight M. d'Eu never imagined they could be pirates until he learnt it from the neighbours after the band had passed. They passed through the viliage without doing any harm, and went of to another village described as a rich one some miles distant, where they stole seventy-three head of cattle and what clothing and articles of value they found in the houses. They then returned, and on reaching Tu-phap again they ordered the head man to open the gates to allow them pass through. The head man did so and the pirates again passed in front of M. d'Eu's house without entering it, but on leaving the village they burnt one or two matsheds and fired a few shots in the air. M. d'Eu had in the meantime command of the post there of what was going on. The Courrier says the posts are too distant from each other, and suggests the establishment of
